What is an essay? It is a literary genre, a short essay in prose, expressing the author's personal position on a specific occasion. In the essay, the author makes an attempt to comprehend any idea or problem and expresses his attitude to it in a relaxed form. The author's unique view of social processes and phenomena, style of thinking and culture of speech make the essay especially valuable. The author is free to choose the logic of the presentation of his arguments, but a good essay is characterized by multi-aspect and paradoxical, internal unity and consistency, there are no formulaic formulations and stamps. And finally, the essay is one possible opinion, so it does not pretend to be a definitive disclosure of the problem.

The task 29 of the exam in social studies begins with the selection of one of the problematic utterance (or aphorism) of five. Which statement should I choose? The context offered to the graduate topics is taken from the various basic Sciences of the integrated course of social studies. Revealing the idea of statements, you have to apply social science knowledge, use concepts, theoretical positions. Of course, it is impossible to do it well in an unfamiliar context. Therefore, the first factor that you should take into account when choosing the topic of the essay is the scientific context (philosophical, economic, sociological, socio psychological, political, legal). The second factor is the understanding of the essence of the statement. Carefully analyze each statement. Think about what the author of the statement wants to say, what main idea (idea) he wants to convey to us. The expression of the idea of statements is the starting point in writing an essay, so its misunderstanding or inadequate understanding will not allow to implement the basic requirements of the task 29 exam in social science. The third factor is the possibility to create a logically related reasoning. If it seems impossible to do so, you need to change the subject. So, when choosing a topic, you need to take into account three circumstances: the scientific context, understanding the essence of the statement and the possibility of creating a logically coherent essay.
